The Joy of Collecting Post Cards

Presented by Nancy Redden

JULY PROGRAM:

Post Cards R' Fun! For the July program Nancy Redden focused on our love of the POST CARD hobby. Postcards can evoke memories, history, interests, our passions & heroes. Here are a few of her favorites.

Dr. King "Prince of Peace"

The back side reads Mother's of Serviceman. Pasadena, Calif. 1966.

Black Union Soldiers. Nearly 180,000 black men served in the Union Army during the Civil War.
Tower Records. They always had lots of freebies such as yearly calendars which were spectacular.

The Murphy's Hotel. Built in 1856 Murphy Calif. Mark Twain stayed here, as well as our secretary.

The Madonna Inn. Which room would you choose?

Driving like hell in Hondo Texas. No Thanks!

One of San Francisco's favorite sons, Robin Williams with Pam Dawber

An odd prospective with a fountain in the middle of the street and the female diver, diving into the street
Fatal Wedding. A mechanical and electrical illusion where volunteer couples were transformed into skeletons, based on an ancient Egyptian legend.

The Ballroom was on the second floor and first floor and the basement was the Funhouse called "The Pit"

Auto Racers Willow Grove Park - Some amusement parks actually put cars on roller coaster tracks!

Devil's Gorge: A scenic railway in the early 1900's. There were several of these around the country at that time.

"The Lighting" one of the most frightening rollercoasters ever built. Circa 1928 - 1933

"To Mama from Papa" - Loop the Loop at Atlantic City
Leap Year. These guys are hiding out. Could it be they do not want to marry women?

1st drop "The good old days" - 3 in the front on lap bar, and a 3rd car from the back the guy has a little kid on his lap!!!

The blue Cliff House and yellow Camera Obscura circa 1970s.

The Santa Cruz Giant dipper. This card was mailed in 1972 from our late club member Darlene Thorne to a rollercoaster enthusiast.

David Warren ran the Camera Obscura at the Cliff House for many years and was the first one to light the burning man statue when the event was held on Ocean Beach.
A Tale of Two Postcards By Glenn Koch

As you may well surmise from reading the information that I provided with this edition’s cover card, I much enjoy re-discovering lost images. And when I say lost images, I mean those great cards that you see that just have little or no context attached to them to help place or identify them. They don’t always have to be show stopping images, but usually there is just that little bit of something about them that grabs my attention and makes me want to add them to my collection, and to then research them so that I may know more about them.

Such was the case with the first image in this tale. It popped up on eBay a few months ago in a popular card seller’s eBay auction. The price was not cheap, and it was postally unused, but it just spoke to me. I tried to do a little research but kept coming up empty handed. So, I watched it for a couple of weeks until I finally just decided to buy it in hopes that eventually I could figure out its backstory.

It is a really great card. What is shows is a bunch of cigar smoking men standing on a wooden scaffold amidst the rubble of a burned-out building and one of the men has a huge stack of what looks to be ledgers in his arms. On the right side of the image it states “Removing our books from the vault. All that was left – THE PENNSYLVANIA FIRE has already paid A MILLION DOLLARS – July 14 – and still paying!”

Given that Insurance is my vocation, and that I am from Pennsylvania, this card appealed to me. Deep down I hoped that it may just be San Francisco related since that’s my collecting passion. But nothing on the card directly led one to that conclusion, though my gut was telling me otherwise. When the card came, I scanned it so that I could blow it up and look more closely at it, hoping to find clues. Sadly, there were none other than the signs of the obvious conflagration that had taken place, and the twisted steel. And the kind of rubble that one sees on so many postcards of the ’06 Quake and its aftermath. Indirectly it referenced a date of July 14th has the benchmark for the dollar amount of claims that had been paid out to date... One Million! But other than that, nothing.

The time of year that this card referenced was in line with it being quake-related, a few months after April, but one can’t just assume that it is just because there was a fire, and insurance claims were being paid. There were a number of calamitous fires in American cities, including one in Baltimore that burned large parts of its downtown. And Baltimore would have been a lot closer to The Pennsylvania Fire Insurance Company home office than San Francisco. Plus, beyond the rubble of this one building, we see no other buildings that burned. However, the fact that a million dollars had already been paid certainly implied that it had been a fire of major proportions.

So next I turned to the Internet. There I found an article that briefly mentioned claims that the Pennsylvania Fire Insurance Company had paid as a result of the Quake and Fire of April 1906. Their losses had been substantial and they had done an honorable job when it came to meeting their obligations. But search as I might, there the trail ran cold. I had hoped that this would be a quake related card, but of that I had no solid confirmation. So I put the card aside, and figured I’d research again some other time in hopes that I might come up with more information.

Flash forward to now. Our new newsletter editor had reached out about a cover card. I told him that I thought I had something that might work and that I would scan it and send it to him. I opened my desk drawer and pulled out a stack of cards to look through, where I then came across this fire card again... thinking what I shame I hadn’t found out anything more about it. About 15 cards further down the pile, I came across another card that almost caused me to drop the whole pile. I couldn’t believe what I was looking at... and quite frankly didn’t even remember buying this card. The card shows a bunch of men gathered on and around the steps of a typical San Francisco triplex building; all looking very official. On the right hand side of the card was typed the message “The adjusting office of the ‘PENNSYLVANIA FIRE.’ Paid to date. August 31, ’06, $2,301,529.53” The answer to my quest had been right under my nose the whole time. It doesn’t get much better than that.
REVERE BEACH AND THE OF CARNIVAL 1906

That's Mount Vesuvius —
Or is it just a Postcard Volcano on the Beach?

by Philip K. Feldman

As soon as I received this image in my inbox from Nancy Redden, my eyes were transfixed on an erupting volcano with scores of onlookers surrounding it in their Sunday's best. Leah A. Schmit's book Revere Beach, published by Arcadia Publishing, 2002, describes it as a "cleverly crafted wire-and-paper-mache' attraction, named for the notorious Italian volcano Mount Vesuvius, was created by businessman Herbert Ridgeway. Sited directly on the sand in front of the Nautical Garden, this splendid simulated volcano erected for Carnival Week of 1906 remained standing for two weeks. The illuminated marvel erupted on cue, ejecting into the air souvenir postcards, accompanied by thick smoke and thunderous noise." If you are interested in exploring the topic on Revere Beach more for a future program on this fantastic topic, please don't hesitate to be in touch.
